Photoshop CS2 introduced several tools to access and manipulate color, tonality, and exposure. In addition to these tools, Adobe made several changes to the program's interface. Adobe Photoshop CS2 Toolbar Photoshop CS2 has a blue color scheme. The toolbars, which are similar to the browser's toolbars, consist of two main parts: the main image area and the foreground toolbox. Most of the tools are grouped in a box similar to a standard browser. Each tool has an icon that displays the tool's name. A small + sign will be displayed in front of the icon to allow users to add the tool to the toolbox to the main image area. The user can also remove the tool from the box by clicking on the x. By default, the tools are located in the top left corner of the main image area. The foreground toolbox contains the tools accessible from the keyboard. It is the location of the most commonly used tools. Selecting from this toolbox is done by pressing the Alt key and then clicking the tool's icon to the right of the main image area.

Many of the tools in the toolbox have a shortcut key assigned to them. The main image area allows the user to move, resize, and rotate, as well as move or copy an existing image to a new position. A dashed rectangle surrounds the main image area to help indicate where the image will be drawn in order to create a transparent image. The user can also change the image's color mode in the main image area. The default color mode is Sepia. The user can also change the image to grayscale, black-and-white, and add a color overlay to the image. The overlay tool allows the user to add an overlay to the image. More than one overlay can be added at the same time. The shapes in the overlay toolbox can be moved, resized, and rotated, as well as erased and repositioned. The pen tool is used to draw with a click-and-drag method. Sketching The paint brush tool can be used to paint an image by adding colors and shapes to the image. Color Picker The Color Picker is a tool used to access and select the colors used in an image. It can be used to access the color of an object, a range of colors, or a specific hue of color. It can also

The Eraser tool allows you to delete pixels in an image. This is useful for removing unwanted objects or objects that have been painted on. You can also create and use custom brushes and gradients. Compositing is the process of combining or layering one image (the source) over another (the background) for a final image. Desaturate is a powerful tool for making color neutral images. It is often used to make black-and-white or color toned images. The Live Paint tool allows you to paint with color directly in your file. Nov. 17, 2013 More students are learning to read proficiently at an older age and fewer kids are falling behind in school, according to a report released Tuesday. The National Assessment of Educational Progress is part of the Nation's Report Card, a federal education program that follows students from kindergarten to 12th grade. An estimated 3 million students are now considered proficient in reading, up from 1.5 million four years ago. It marks the first time the percentage of such students has remained above 3 percent for three years in a row, the report said. For math, it was the first time that more than half of students tested met or exceeded proficiency levels - 52 percent - since the start of the NAEP testing program in 2000. "We are seeing incredible gains in math and reading achievement," Education Secretary Arne Duncan said in a statement. The report also included some mixed news. For the first time, the percentage of students proficient in science and engineering increased over the four years. But the gap between boys and girls in reading increased from sixth grade to eighth grade. The percentage of white students achieving at least proficiency in math increased from 69 percent to 78 percent in the last four years. "Reading and writing are critical to success in life. They are the fundamental building blocks of knowledge and help kids unlock the world of learning," Duncan said. The program said the increase in math proficiency was most likely a result of the No Child Left Behind law, which requires schools to raise math scores. With 31 percent of the students proficient in science, an increase from 24 percent in 2008, the number of male students achieving proficiency in science also increased significantly, from 46 percent to 65 percent. The vast majority of the 14.7 million students who took the test did well in reading and math. The testing was given to 11th-graders in September as they prepare for the International Baccalaureate Program, which has become the most widely used internationally recognized high school diploma program. Earlier assessments have shown that boys score higher than girls in math, and white students do better than Hispanic and African-American students in reading. In order to facilitate understanding, technology described in the present specification will be described by way of an example in the form of a train. The example is, however, not limitative. The invention is equally applicable to, for example, an automotive vehicle, a watercraft, and aircraft, a mobile infrastructure
