Every version of Photoshop is different from the next version. Photoshop CS6, for example, has a much-improved Quick Selection tool that makes selecting certain areas of an image much easier. Photoshop CS6 works much better than earlier versions. Moving around the image The image to be manipulated is loaded into the image file just as it was saved by your camera or scanner. From there, you can either use the Edit menu or the keyboard to load the image into Photoshop. Image manipulation is a lot of fun, but it requires thinking a little outside the box. You must be creative to come up with ways of creating a unique result. The image-editing process should make you think like a painter and have the same analytical process. Most importantly, you must develop a photographic eye that enables you to pick up subtle details in an image. The best images can be accomplished with a little creativity and a lot of skill. Two of the most important tools for image manipulation are the Marquee Tool and the Brush. Figure 2-11 shows the Marquee tool and a few brushes ready for work. I like to work from the top down when doing image editing. I always select the topmost layer of my image by clicking on it and dragging the active layer to the top of the layers palette. I often create a new layer above the topmost layer for additional modifications. After that, I start working from the top down. Figure 2-11: The top two tools in Photoshop for moving around the image are the Marquee Tool and the Brush. The marquee tool has two important functions: Deselect: If you're trying to select an area of a layer, the marquee tool has several useful tools that speed up the selection process. Click the left or right arrow, and you move forward or backward until you see the point where you want to place your cursor. Then simply click the mouse to put the cursor on the point you want to select. When you click the left or right arrows, the selected area moves. You can use the selection tools in tandem to select and modify multiple areas of the image at once. If you make a mistake, the marquee tool lets you easily undo the last action on the selected area. Mask: The marquee tool is also used to create a mask. You use the marquee tool to make a shape that's transparent. A marquee-ready object isn't visible through the mask area. If you

Q: Codeigniter - Post data value not set I have the following jquery to upload a file. The file uploads and saves to the directory but the file name is empty. And for the next page if I want to echo it out, it has the following value: Database I'm thinking it's has to do with the post data value not being set properly but I'm not sure. This is the code: `$(document).ready(function() { $("form").submit(function() { var inputFile = $("input[type=file]").files[0]; inputFileSize = inputFile.size; var formData = new FormData(); formData.append("file", inputFile); $.ajax({ url : " type : 'POST', data: formData, processData : false, contentType : false, success : function(data) { alert(data); }, error : function(XMLHttpRequest, textStatus, errorThrown) {`

Q: Function call to a union of two structures. How to pass function that takes a union as first parameter? How can I pass the x and y union as parameter to function, which takes union as first parameter? `typedef struct point { float x, y; } point; union test { point p; float f; }; float test_sum(union test x, union test y) { return (x.f + y.f); }` Compiler says: error: request for member 'f' in something not a structure or union A: There are two different questions here: How can I pass a union as a first parameter to a function? How can I call a function that takes a union as a first parameter? As @mofop already said in his comment, you can not use unions as function parameters. See Why can I not use unions in a function parameter?. To solve your problem I would suggest two approaches: First approach: You can create a macro for the return type: `#define TEST_SUM(a, b) (a.f + b.f)` You can then call this macro. Like this: `const union test point { point p; float f; } point = {.f = 5 }; float test_sum(union test x, union test y) { return TEST_SUM(x, y); } void main() { float result = test_sum(point, point); printf("Result: %f ", result); }` Second approach: As an alternative you can create a wrapper-struct to encapsulate your union, like this: `typedef struct { union test x, y; float f; } test;` Then you can return a pointer to that union, and cast it as a float when calling the function: `float test_sum(union test x, union test y) { return (float)x.f + y.f; }` Note that if you want to change the type, there is an
