the most significant change in this release of patched is a new configuration option for "detect new databases". this option will check if data in an existing database has been modified since the last version of patched was executed. when this option is set to "true" patched will automatically add a record in the database that it is checking. this record contains the name of the database with which patched is checking and the date and time in gmt at which the latest version of the data from the database was generated. the records will be added after a certain time is passed, depending on the database and how often patched checks the database. if the "detect new databases" option is set to "false" it will simply add a record in the database that patched is checking and will not be able to delete the records when you remove patched. the default configuration of "detect new databases" is set to "false". detect new databases: false as a suggestion, patched can be configured to only check a certain set of databases for changes. one example would be the databases used by your employees. the configuration file then looks something like this: patchconfig = { autodetectiontestdbs: none, dbs:

["userdb1", "userdb2", "userdb3",], } this will only check "userdb1", "userdb2" and "userdb3". if you also want to be notified when a database has been updated, then the following configuration entry can be added to the configuration file: a limitation that patched has is that it will only be notified when the data is changed from the original version of the data that the last version of patched was executed.

this means that patched will be notified when a column of a row has been changed. if you want patched to be notified when the entire row has been changed, you have to send the changes to the server yourself.

Trailerace. Is it really Apple and Google that have to pay over the boat to have SSL and TLS? As there are hundreds of thousands of applications and websites that use those protocols. One or two bad apples doesn't affect all the rest of them. I'm sure this will be evident once the market for SSL/TLS cert is saturated. Then the only prices for certs will be the freebies. But the default for all SSL/TLS certification will be the freebies.
