What's New In DateCalc?

DateCalc is an application to help you calculate the number of days between two dates. You specify a start date and an end date. DateCalc calculates the number of days between the two dates. If the number of days is over a specified number of days, the number of days is reset to a number of days based on the input by the user. How to use: □ Open DateCalc from the <Start Menu> and select <Options...>. Check <Don't show weekends in red when minimized>. Enter the <Start Date> and <End Date> Select <Number of days> Themes: <Customize...> is available to change the color of your background and text. <Customize...> will allow you to change the number of days per week displayed for calculating the number of days between dates. Requirements: DateCalc will function properly on Windows XP, Windows Vista, and Windows 7. Compatibility: DateCalc will work properly on all Windows versions. A: You can calculate any number of days from any given date by using the modulo operator %% in place of a numerical division. So if you want to calculate to the nearest quarter (30 days), you can use $30 \% 4 = 0$. A: Here's a function you can use if you just want to calculate the number of days to some day in the future or past: (0) = today (Returns the current date) (1) = one day in the future (Returns today + 1 day) (n) = n number of days in the future (Returns n days + today) (n) = n number of days in the past (Returns n days - today) (n) = n number of days from the past (Returns today - n days) (2) = two days in the future (Returns today + 2 days) (n) = n number of days from the past (Returns today - n days) (n) = n number of days to the future (Returns n days - today) (2n) = two n number of days in the future (Returns today + 2 n days) (n) = n number of days from the past (Returns today - n days) (2n) = two n number of days in the past (Returns today - 2 n days) (n) = n number of
