Ignitiondownloadpcgames88Expression of the cytokine-like product of rat glioma cells on the cell surface of infected human cells. Rat cells transformed by the Kirsten murine sarcoma virus release a cytokine-like molecule into the culture supernatant.
This factor (tumor-derived lymphokine, TDL) is shown to activate a cytotoxic immune response in vivo. We have now detected TDL on the surface of human cells infected with Kirsten murine sarcoma virus or with other transforming retroviruses. This suggests that viral transformation alters the cells such that surface expression of TDL becomes detectable. This altered form of human cells could be of value in the development of assays for the screening of selective antiviral drugs.
